In accordance with the previous historical, social, political and ethical practice of the Macedonian society, in absence of an internationally acknowledged definition, the term – Youth – in the Republic of Macedonia signifies the particular socio-ethic category of population at the age from 15 to 24 years which is exceptionally vulnerable regarding the socio-economic transformations of the society and, that bears the critical thought and impulse for transformation and further development of such a society.

Considering the consequences of socio-economic crises in the Republic of Macedonia which disables the normal process of development of one active and responsible individual (extension of the educational period, inability to get an employment, inability to establish a family, economical dependence of parents, that is to say the absence of personal independence), each serious action or youth program should consider the individuals from 24 to at least 30 years of age as well, in order to moderate or overcome the obstacles standing in front of their development as an individuals and responsible citizens of the Macedonian society.
